Troovi is simply a brilliant little gem for teachers collecting photos from multiple student digital cameras. Simply grab the URL directly above the logo and share it with the whole class. Students simply upload the images from their cameras to that URL (no login required) and within seconds everyone has an online album to share. No more having to bring the digital cameras up to the teacher's desk one at a time. Yay!

LightShot - Simple and Free Screen Capture Resource

I've been using Snagit for a number of years to do screen capturing and editing of screenshots and enjoy it thoroughly. However, I know from experience that not everyone has access to this paid software, but they still have the need to do screenshots and editing. For those of you that fit in this category, you need to go check out LightShot. LightShot is a very lightweight (meaning that it won't burn up a lot of memory or disk space on your computer), free (although you can donate money to them if you find it to be a valuable resources), Windows browser (FireFox, Chrome or IE), or Desktop application (Windows). (whew... was that too many parenth?)

I downloaded this yesterday and have had a great time testing it. I've found it to be very powerful as both a screen capturing tool, and an image editor. I've been using the Chrome plug-in, and have had absolutely no problems using it. The Desktop Application is very cool in that you press the "Print Screen" and it gives you the ability to select the portion of the screen you actually want
The Fischbowl: Is It Okay To Be A Technologically Illiterate Teacher?

In order to teach it, we have to do it. How can we teach this to kids, how can we model it, if we aren’t literate ourselves? You need to experience this, you need to explore right along with your students. You need to experience the tools they’ll be using in the 21st century, developing your own networks in parallel with your students. You need to demonstrate continual learning, lifelong learning – for your students, or you will continue to teach your students how to be successful in an age that no longer exists.

Or something like that.

So, let me repeat the last part of what I wrote back in February of 2006:

If a teacher today is not technologically literate - and is unwilling to make the effort to learn more - it’s equivalent to a teacher 30 years ago who didn’t know how to read and write.
Using Flickr Photos as a Travel Guide

By Jennifer Valentino-DeVries

Every minute, there are thousands of images uploaded to photo site Flickr by people who want to share them with the world. And it turns out that if you look at these photos and where they were taken, you can get a pretty good idea of the best path to take when sightseeing.

Researchers at Yahoo, which owns Flickr, developed a way to gather photos and construct travel itineraries based on the location of the photos and the time between each picture. The tool, which gives people possible itineraries if they select a city and indicate how much time they have, works for five cities — Barcelona, London, Paris, New York and San Francisco.

Diigolet

Diigolet is not as feature-rich as the Diigo toolbar, but it can be set-up by simple drag-and-drop - no download or installation needed, and it works for all major browsers. Much more powerful than bookmarklets offered by other social bookmarking sites, Diigolet is a "super bookmarklet" that allows you to highlight and add sticky-notes, in addition to simple bookmarking.

You can get started by watching a tutorial video.

Firefox

1. Make sure the "Bookmarks Toolbar" is visible. If it is not, go to menu View > Toolbars.
2. Drag this button: [Diigolet] up to your Bookmarks Toolbar.
Web highlighter for iPad Safari has the following features:

- Highlight the webpage, just like in iBooks;
- Bookmark the page with tags;
- Add sticky note;
- Store bookmarks, highlights, sticky notes in your diigo account.

To highlight a webpage:

1. Tap the Web Highlighter bookmarklet and a toolbar will show up;
2. Select some text, then click the Highlight button in the toolbar;
3. You can change the highlight color by tapping the highlighted text.

Introduction

ZoomIt is a screen zoom and annotation tool for technical presentations that include application demonstrations. ZoomIt runs unobtrusively in the tray and activates with customizable hotkeys to zoom in on an area of the screen, move around while zoomed, and draw on the zoomed image. I wrote ZoomIt to fit my specific needs and use it in all my presentations.

About This Session
Cloud computing - Web 2.0? You have heard this terminology, but what does it all mean? Is this something you might be able to use? How much will it cost? And how does one go about accessing and using these technologies?

Before leaving this session, you will learn how to share information, ideas and/or media, including your digital photos, video, and music with a worldwide audience or just close family and friends. It is your choice. And you can store these files online for free. Bring 12 or so ordinary digital photos and/or videos on a CD or thumb drive to transform into an extraordinarily captivating presentation accessible on the WWW—all for free!
